The Cry for Justice: How a well-intentioned law became tool for legal terrorism

-Dr. Ujjwal Kumar Singh
Assistant Professor

The recent tragic end of life of 34-year-old techie Atul Suhash, reportedly by suicide after enduring a prolonged delay in legal trail, highlights the painful consequences of a judicial system that can sometimes become a source of mental agony rather than hope. Atul, overwhelmed by frustration in life and a sense of helplessness, he penned a suicide note titled “Justice is Due,” reflecting his inner belief that the court of justice had failed him. His heartbreaking end is not an isolated incident but a reflection of a deeper problem where individuals find themselves trapped in the judicial process with no clear path to resolution.

Anil’s case has some similarities to that of Raja Nand Kumar a historical figure who was once the Governor of Hugli (In Calcutta) under Nawab Siraj-Ud-Daulah in 1756. After aligning himself with the East India Company in 1757, for his loyalty he was called the “Black Colonel” during Clive’s era. Nand Kumar in later stage of his life brought serious charges of bribery and corruption against the then Governor General, Warren Hastings in 1775. Despite his status, Nand Kumar’s accusations were ultimately embroiled in a legal system that, rather than ensuring justice, became a tool for political and personal conflict. The judge in the case and Warren Hestings colluded and ultimately resulted in the death of Raja Nand Kumar. Both Atul and Nand Kumarsuffered at the hands of a biased court system that, instead of serving justice and ensuring equality, acted as an instrument of frustration leading to the loss of life as the court chose to hear the case on other aspects but the grounds of merit.

The situation now is hence on the question of integrity and functioning of all the stakeholders namely, the judiciary, executive, legislature, and society at large. The Supreme Court has showed concerns in several cases, such as Prity Gupta v. State of Jharkhand, Arnesh Kumar v. State of Bihar, Rajesh Sharma v. State of Uttar Pradesh, and Satendra Kumar Antil v. CBI, raising alarms over the misuse of legal provisions, particularly Section 498A of the Indian Penal Code (IPC) now Sec 85 BNS 2023. Originally designed to protect women from cruelty within marriage, Section 498A has been increasingly exploited for personal vendettas, distorting the very purpose it was meant to serve.

This troubling pattern has not gone unnoticed by lawmakers, with the Bharatiya Nyaya Sanhita (BNS) of 2023 replacing the IPC. Section 498A has now been incorporated into Section 85 of the new code. While the intent behind this reform may be to address the misuse of the law, the question remains whether such changes will lead to meaningful justice.

LEGAL WRITINGS

There are already various tests to make a balance between these two conflicting interests.

Themis the god of justice who is part of twelve titans, states that she cannot discriminate between two persons but focuses only on the evidence. In India the grundnorm of our legal system, the Constitution of India itself ensures this magnum opus idea manifested in Article 14 and 21.

Blackstone Ratio highlights the principle that it is better for ten guilty people to escape justice than for one innocent person to be wrongfully convicted, stressing the importance of avoiding miscarriages of justice. The Presumption of Innocence ensures that every accused person is considered innocent until proven guilty, protecting human rights in criminal law.

The evolution of conjugal relations has shifted from sacramental to contractual after liberalization, privatization and globalization.

As marriage evolves into a contractual relationship, legal professionals play a crucial role in drafting, negotiating, and enforcing marriage contracts, protecting the rights of both parties. The reason behind this logic that earlier marriage was sacrament so Pujari or purohits, Qaji, Priests are required for valid marriage. The validity of these marriages was based on sacramental values and in that condition, we need expert of those sacraments. Now it is a contract and validity of marriage is legal; question so we need expert advocates for a marriage which ensure the interest of parties.

In summary, the legal landscape of marriage and conjugal relationships has evolved from a sacramental bond to a contractual agreement, reflecting broader societal changes. This shift highlights the increasing importance of clear contract drafting, marriage registration, and the involvement of legal professionals in ensuring transparency and fairness. Likewise, core principles such as equality before the law, the presumption of innocence, and the right to fair trials are fundamental to safeguarding individual rights within the criminal justice system, ensuring that justice is upheld for all.

Henderson Doctrine through constructive Res Judicata in India (Celir LLP v. Sumati Prasad Bafna)

–Dr. Vaibhav Uniyal

The Henderson doctrine, derived from the 1843 English case of Henderson v. Henderson, requires the proposition that all issues of the same subject ought to be tried in one action. This principle prevents receiving issues that could have been presented earlier, and this saves time of court and prevents abuse of the legal process. In Indian context the doctrine is found embedded in Explanation IV of Section 11 of CPC as constructive res judicata.

The Supreme Court of India in the case of Celir LLP v Sumati Prasad Bafna & Ors. (2024) confirmed the Henderson doctrine. This case is also concerned with a conflict of interest in a secured asset sold under Section 13(4) of the Securitization and Reconstruction of Financial

Assets and Enforcement of Securities Interest (SARFAESI) Act, 2002.

In the present case, a loan had been secured by Sumati Prasad Bafna, from Union Bank of India by mortgaging a parcel of land. The bank-initiated proceedings under the SARFAESI Act upon defaulting and classified the loan as a Non-Performing Asset (NPA). Celir LLP emerged as the highest bidder for the secured asset auctioned by the bank thereafter. However, Bafna sought to redeem the mortgage by repaying the outstanding amount which resulted in a series of legal proceedings.

The Sale in favor of Celir LLP was confirmed by the Supreme Court. The apex court further directed the issuance of the sale certificate. However, Bafna and associated parties engaged in actions aimed at frustrating the court's decision, including initiating proceedings before different forums to obstruct Celir LLP's attempts to obtain physical possession of the property. ‘

An abuse of the judicial process was observed to have been constituted through the actions of Bafna and others by the Apex Court in line with the Doctrine being discussed. The principles enshrined in the Henderson doctrine stood violated by an attempt to raise issues in subsequent proceedings that could have been addressed in the initial suit. The court further emphasized that such conduct undermines the authority of the judiciary and obstructs the effective delivery of justice.

The court also clarified that the absence of a specific prohibitory order does not excuse parties from adhering to the broader spirit of judicial proceedings. The court further observed that even in the absence of explicit prohibitory directions, deliberate actions aimed at circumventing court decisions amount to contempt. This interpretation given by the guardian of the Constitution has reinforced Henderson doctrine's role in preventing re-litigation of issues that should have been resolved in earlier proceedings.

The longtime stance of the Indian judiciary on the efficiency and finality of the courts has been epitomized by this decision. The Supreme Court has sent a clear message by invoking the Henderson doctrine– there shall be no tolerance of attempts to re-litigate settled matters or circumvent judicial decisions through subsequent proceedings. Cases of filing baseless claims have hence been discouraged by this approach. Further, it also ensures that the system of justice deliverance is not abused.

Illicit use of Drugs among Youth and Adolescents: An Alarming Issue

–Dr.Aishwarya Singh

“What’s good for one may be poison for another” – the age-old grandmom's adage is apt when discussing the use and misuse of drugs leading to addiction, a term the denotes the abuse of over-the-counter medications, exaggerating the family, economy and community thereby turning into a social issue. Teenage drug and alcohol abuse is a disproportionate and serious public health concern that shall be discussed in this short article.

The "International Day against Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking" is observed on the 26th of June and the global community is trying hard to raise awareness on the dangers of drugs, especially among young people. Drug trafficking is in a close third in the world, behind the arms trade and petroleum, with an annual revenue of almost $500 billion. Almost 190 million individuals worldwide use drugs of some kind. The rampant manufacture and distribution of drugs has led to crime and violence across the world. Today, there is no part of the world that is free from the curse of drug trafficking and drug addiction. Millions of drug addicts, all over the world, are leading miserable lives, between life and death.

One million heroin addicts are officially registered in India, but there may be up to five million unofficially, according to a UN assessment. What began as informal use among a small number of young people in the metro who belonged to affluent groups has spread to all facets of society. Intravenous drug use, especially in conjunction with other sedatives and medicines, has replaced the inhalation of heroin alone. This has made the effect more intense, accelerated the addiction process, and made recovery more difficult. The most often misused drugs in India are cannabis, heroin, and medicinal medications made in India.

Numerous social, cultural, biological, geographic, historical, and economic factors contribute to the complexity of drug misuse. Drug abusers are more common because of the breakdown of the traditional joint family system, the lack of love and care from parents in contemporary households where both parents work, the waning of traditional religious and moral ideals, etc. The type of drug consumed, the person's personality, and the addict's immediate surroundings are also the main causes of drug use, misuse, and abuse. The conventional means of social control have become less effective as a result of industrialization, urbanization, and migration, leaving people more susceptible to the pressures and tensions of contemporary life.

The fast-changing social milieu, among other factors, is mainly contributing to the proliferation of drug abuse, both of traditional and of new psychoactive substances. The introduction of synthetic drugs and intravenous drug use leading to HIV/AIDS has added a new dimension to the problem, especially in the Northeast states of the country.

The two identified causes of drug abuse among youth are peer pressure and depression. The effect of drug abuse on youth is to be viewed from three aspects namely Social, Financial and Health besides the Physiological effect as in the case of "Methamphetamine Effects" result in "Wired sleeplessness for days and weeks at a time, total loss of appetite, extreme weight loss, dilated pupils, excited, talkative, deluded sense of power, paranoia, depression, loss of control, nervousness, unusual sweating, shaking, anxiety, hallucinations, aggression, violence, dizziness, mood changes, blurred vision, mental confusion, agitation” (Murray, et.al, 2008).

The preventive measures against drug abuse include resistance to peer pressure, abstinence from drug use, and choice of a healthy and balanced lifestyle.

A comprehensive strategy involving specific programs to bring about an overall reduction in use of drugs has been evolved by various government agencies and NGOs and is further supplemented by measures like education and counseling. India has bilateral agreements on drug trafficking with 13 countries, including Pakistan and Burma. Prior to 1999, extradition between India and the United States occurred under the auspices of a 1931 treaty signed by the United States and the United Kingdom, which was made applicable to India in 1942. However, a. new extradition treaty between India and the United States entered into force in July 1999. A Mutual Legal Assistance Treaty was signed by India and the United States in October 2001. The intervention of the agencies of the state and the legal framework to combat the evil of drug abuse of all forms is the only light at the end of the dark tunnel.

The Interface of Patent Exhaustion and Global Competition Policies

–D. Dr. Lakshmi Priya
Associate Professor

An important, interesting and intriguing aspect of the patent regime much in vogue and more of concern in the relevant market both product and geographic is the interface of the doctrine governing the exhaustion of patent and the policies governing pan global competition that are in juxtaposition. The thematic conceptualization of the intricate interfaces of the two is idealistic for a regulatory framework that ensures the functionality of the First Sale Doctrine. The Doctrine of Exhaustion, an attribution of the First Sale Doctrine is a consumption right for any Intellectual property, be it patents, copyrights or trademarks to name a few, as a subsequent result and consequence of a valid sale of title transaction of the tangible property that incorporates the intellectual asset by the owner, creator, inventor as the case maybe that negates the right of the original inventor or creator, specifically the holder of the IP on further transfer in general and sale in specific of the said property.

Article 6 of the Trade Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights (TRIPS), states that “the issue of exhaustion of Intellectual Property Rights is a matter of national discretion and each member country is entitled to prohibit or allow parallel imports within its own legal framework.”

The arguments date back to the decision in 1853 in the Bloomer v. McQuewan case where the Court drew a strong distinction between a license of the patent and the acquisition of the patented asset, upheld by the Supreme court of USA in the case of Adams v. Bruke and Betts v. Willmot in the United Kingdom, thereby recognizing the concept of “Implied Licenses”.

The conceptualization of the doctrine of Exhaustion in relation on the right over the IP asset is national, international and regional as observed in the case of Kapil Wadhwa v. Samsung Electronics Co. Ltd and the adaptation of the European Economic Area (EEA) by the United Kingdom to cite a few.

The doctrine has been enshrined in the various Intellectual Property Acts such as Sections 29(1) and 29(6) (b), Section 30(3)(b) and Section 30(4) of the Trade Marks Act, 1999, Section 107-A(b) of the Indian Patents Act, 1970 and Section 14 of the Copyright Act of 1957 besides others. The principle takes effect from the case of DVD infringements barred under Section 51(b) in the Act of 1957 in

Warner Bros. Entertainment Inc. v. Santosh to John Wiley & Sons Inc. v. Prabhat Chander Jain. As United States Appellate Federal Judge Posner said, “in the absence of exhaustion, if every time a car owner wished to resell his/her used car needed to request a license from the car maker, that would lead to an absurd situation of implying automatic compulsory licenses. The legal solution is to assume that when that owner purchased the car, the right to use the trademark for commercial operations was consumed.”

The international competition gets affected and parallel importation and international exhaustion of rights result in the economic consequences as they make genuine goods available to consumers at low prices, however often their source of resale, re-exportation, hire or rental may not be genuine or authorized and may eventually harm the reputation and goodwill of the Intellectual Property Right (IP) holder. Barriers to trade and globalized free trade economies being on the rise, many nations resort to international exhaustion as this is the only means by which the IP holder can protect and enforce his rights in every nation worldwide in a multitude of jurisdictions.

2nd edition of Seminar, 'InnoSustain', held at Law College Dehradun

Taking only what is needed from natural resources is good for all: Anil Joshi

By OUR STAFF REPORTER

DEHRADUN 25 Oct: The second edition of the two-day National Seminar, InnoSustain, was organised at Law College Dehradun of Uttarakhand University. Renowned environmentalist Dr Anil Joshi was the Chief Guest on this occasion and Prof SP Sati of College of Forestry was present as the keynote speaker. University Chairman Jitendra Joshi, Vice Chancellor Prof Dharmabuddhi, Pro Vice Chancellor Prof Rajesh Bahuguna and Principal Prof Poonam Rawat along with the guests inaugurated the seminar by lighting the lamp.

Seminar coordinator Prof Rajesh Bahuguna said that 457 teachers and researchers from more than 30 universities and colleges across the country are participating in this national seminar. The organisers received 224 research papers out of which 122 research papers were selected for publication and presentation.

In his address, Dr Anil Joshi said that the biggest challenge is to maintain a balance between the consumption of natural resources and cooperation in their conservation. He said that seminars and discussions on topics like climate change and environmental conservation and the efforts of educational institutions and environmentalists will bear fruit only when policy makers, the general public, and governments take them seriously. In his detailed lecture, he gave the basic mantra of environmental conservation that it is in everyone's interest to take only the required amount from natural resources. Taking only the required amount of natural resources is actually the balance between development and consumption. Prof SP Sati kept his presentation focused on the Himalayas. First, he explained the structure and current outline of the Himalayas. He presented research on topics like melting of glaciers on the Himalayas, excessive rainfall in some places, drought in others. He expressed concern that energy capable of causing a major earthquake is being stored in the Himalayan regions. The reckless hydro projects established in the mountains are acting as icing on the cake.

Prof Dharmabuddhi said in his address that experts of law can play a central role in social change by practicing climate change and environmental protection. He described the seminar as incomparable and successful.

Prof Poonam Rawat thanked the dignitaries present including subject experts, teachers and researchers participating in the national seminar.

On this occasion, mainly Dr VP Joshi, Prof MP Singh, KV Pokhriyal, Dr Radheshyam Jha, Dr V Bhuvaneshwari, Amit Chaudhary, Dr Manish Bhardwaj, Dr Shikha Gairola, Dr Vaibhav Uniyal and Ashok Dobhal along with a large number of teachers, employees and students were present.
